About the Charts

There are three types of charts in this school supplies inventory: individual child charts; entire homeschool charts; and charts for co-op or other extra teaching needs.

Individual Child Charts:

Because we each school differently (and some subjects may require a range of books and supplies), I've created a few different templates that will work when determining each child's needs (and how your current supplies might meet those needs). Each document contains a column where you can make a plan on how to get that particular supply (if it is needed).

I've also filled in some subject names in the "subject" column in the charts. Again, I've tried to include as many subjects as possible. With this in mind, you may find that a child is going to use all or some of the subjects listed here. If you're not planning to teach a particular subject listed, simply cross it off the chart. There are also blank spaces in some versions of the charts so that you can add in subjects not listed here or customize the lists. In short, customize these charts to work for you!

Here are six charts for gathering school supply needs for each individual child:

- Individual Child: general school supplies needs
- Individual Child: list of all subjects on one page and their needs
- Individual Child: blank list with room for all subjects on one page and their needs
- Individual Child: blank list of four subjects on one page and their needs
- Individual Child: blank list of two subjects on one page and their needs
- Individual Child: blank list of one subject on one page and its needs

Entire Homeschool and Co-Op or Other Teaching Needs Charts:

I've created a chart for gathering supplies for your entire homeschool, and a chart to address supply needs for a co-op you may teach at.

- Entire Homeschool: List of needs for the entire school
- For Co-Op or Other Teaching Needs: Blank list of needs

Please feel free to print as many copies of each chart for your individual homeschool!

Don't forget to review your electronic resources (digital curriculum or books on your hard drive, for example) as part of your assessment and inventory.

Happy organizing!
