Eulogy for a Brother

Samuel Michael Hendricks

I want to thank you all for being here with me today. Sam was my older brother and also my only surviving family member. Sam and I lost our parents and two sisters in a car crash about ten years ago. As you mostly know, before the crash, Sam and I were close, but not that close. We always celebrated holidays together and of course we talked from time to time between holiday events. But that all changed when we lost the rest of our family that summer ten years ago.

Sam and I soon found that moving back into our parents home was a way to somehow keep our family together. For the past 9 years Sam and I lived in our parents home, and became much closer than we ever had during our childhood or our early adult years. And I do not know how I will keep going to that house without Sam there. I will miss him very much.

As most of you know, Sam was a very quiet person. He never liked to have anyone's attention focused on him. He was humble and kind, but for all his quiet and humble ways, he was one of the most action-packed accomplishees I have ever known. Sam never tired. I don't think he slept much. Especially when you realize how much he accomplished in such a little time.

It is still hard to believe that somebody who had as much energy as Sam did can be gone now. In so many ways, Sam was immortal to me. When I think of Sam, I always think of infinite existence. He was so creative, so brilliant and so alive - but quietly so. He did not need fame or fortune or recognition to know that what he was embarked upon was a good thing. He just knew.

For many of you who have been to the house, you know what I mean. When Sam became interested in oil painting, one of the bedrooms was quietly converted to his art studio. He would paint for hours upon end. Usually only eating if I brought him food. And as you know, his art was incredible. But he never showed it. I know some of you were given paintings by him as gifts. He knew you liked them, so they were yours. Treasure those paintings now.

Again, when Sam realized that our world was the information age. Silently and without offense the house had another bedroom converted to an office. And of course in no time at all, that office was filled with computer equipment and a work bench where computer parts and machines were all in various stages of building. Soon a bookshelf filled with reference manuals graced the room. It was not too long after that, Sam a brilliant architect with a very good career, was hanging certifications from Microsoft on his walls. You know, he just tacked them to the wall with a thumbtack. I was the one who put more reverence to them by getting them properly matted and framed.

And so it went with Sam. He was just a brilliant, quiet genius who could do anything that he chose.

Yet he was also there for his friends. I know there were so many times when each one of you found solace in Sam's advice or friendship or warm gentle ways. And he was the kind of person who didn't force his ideas or thoughts on you. He just listened and made his own comment about the situation. If you chose to do something about it. That was up to you.

The house is truly empty now. I am the only survivor of the Hendricks Family. I will do my best to carry the spirits of my family - and most especially, Sam - forward every day. Honor and love him too - carry his spirit with you.

When you think of Sam, think still of immortality and infinity because to me, even though he died at the age of 38, he is infinitely immortal.

Eulogy For A Brother

It was just like yesterday when you see your brother alive and well, but now the brother you've seen full of zest the other day now lay lifeless and no longer have the enthusiasm and keenness to speak to you. So, if you have been tasked to speak of a eulogy for a brother, an opportunity to say the words that longed to escape ones lips should now serve as a final tribute and respect to him.

Finding a sample eulogy for a brother should comprise of structured composition of well organized contents.

Your eulogy should start with a simple statement followed by your own recollection of your brother. Eulogies are great venue to write down what you've remembered most of your brother and be able to share it to numbers of people who wish to be with you in these trying times. Apart from this, you can also write how the family has been trying to take and cope up with the situation and how you've been filled with sorrow and grief the time you've learned that your brother passed away.

Writing a eulogy for a brother might be a bit complicated on your part as scribbling down of thoughts and starting your eulogy writing seems to be harder than you expect it to be. With this, you need to have a pattern that will serve as a jump start to finally writing your first few sentences until you've come to composing the rest of your eulogy. All these sample eulogies are copious on the web, so finding it difficult to chance upon one is impossible.

Another thing to consider in writing a eulogy for a brother is the theme and tone of your eulogy. There are eulogies written with so much grief which is an acceptable one since you've been grieving for the loss of a loved one. However, you can also choose to add up some humors and reflect on the concept that eulogies should be a way to celebrate a life well lived. Regardless of the objective and kind of tone you want to portray, what's important is you've written and exclaimed what you want your brother and the whole people in attendance to know.

Finally, a written eulogy for a brother should be composed and done with heartfelt intention. As you search for samples online, these should only remain as your guideline and format towards crafting your own. Copying word for word will no longer speak of who your brother was. You need not write professionally as long as all the words and lexis jotted down come from the heart of a grieving and bereaved family member who still wishes to have their brother back. As this fervent desire now become an impossible exploit, a good eulogy that signifies more of your brother should make way for the coming out of words left unspoken and acts left unexpressed.
