On January 10, 2017, Governor Eric Greitens signed Executive Order 17-03 which mandated a review of every state agency regulation, including those under the jurisdiction of the Missouri Commission for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing and Board for Certification of Interpreters. As part of the review process, MCDHH will be accepting public comments to identify regulations that are ineffective, unnecessary, or unduly burdensome. The full text of our rules can be found here.

Comments will be accepted:

1. In written form with no more than 500 words before September 17, 2017;
2. As a video in sign language lasting no longer than 5 minutes before September 17, 2017;
3. At this public hearing: Friday, August 18, 2017, 10:00 am-12:00 pm at the Truman Building, Room 492

We look forward to receiving your feedback. Please consider the following in your comments to further help us determine the value of our regulations:

- The regulation is essential to the health, safety, or welfare of Missouri residents;
- The costs of the regulation do not outweigh their benefits, based on a cost benefit analysis;
- A process and schedule exist to measure the effectiveness of the regulation;
- Less restrictive alternatives have been considered and found less desirable than the regulation;
- The regulation is based on sound, reasonably available scientific, technical, economic, and other relevant information; and
- The regulation does not unduly and adversely affect Missouri citizens or customers of the State or the competitive environment in Missouri.

All comments on existing rules must be submitted by September 17, 2017, for consideration in the review process. We encourage you to share this with other stakeholders—including deaf and hard of hearing individuals, sign language interpreters, professionals, teachers, and family members—in order to maximize input. Interpreting into English: The Power of the Voice

0.3 RID PS CEUs

Research indicates we are judged on two main qualities by how we speak. Those qualities are warmth (whether we are friendly and well intentioned) and competence (whether we can deliver on our intentions). Elements such as pitch, volume, pace, cadence, and word choice all contribute to our overall presentation and how others view us. The good news is that if specific elements of our speech work against us, (i.e. lead to people judging us as being cold and/or incompetent), we can focus on changing those traits. What about Deaf ASL users who do not use their voices to communicate? They are not being judged on their vocal traits, but on ours. How does your interpreting work into spoken English affect perceptions of the signing consumer? Do Deaf consumers come across as unfriendly and/or impaired because of our work? Beyond the content accuracy of signed messages, how do we authentically represent Deaf people in spoken English? In this presentation we will explore some challenges and strategies for working from ASL to spoken English.

Becoming a Holistic Practitioner: Breathing & Voicing

0.3 RID PS CEUs

News flash: interpreters are holistic beings (generally referred to as “human”) comprised of mind, body, and spirit. This really isn’t news, so why don’t we approach our work from a holistic view? When we feel stress in our practice, (especially ASL-to-English work), our breathing changes, negatively affecting our work. Rapid, shallow breathing elevates our sympathetic nervous system response, putting us into a fight-flight-or-freeze response. There is good news: breathing is the only biological system that is both completely involuntary and voluntary. Even though breathing automatically changes in response to stress threats, we can recognize our responses and bring them under conscious control, thus enhancing our interpreting! To get a baseline, we will interpret an ASL text and record specific physiological responses. Breathing technique will be presented and practiced while interpreting to address typical patterns. We will interpret again and note differences in physiological responses.

MCDHH only post workshops that are coming within in the next 2-3 weeks. If you want to search for more future workshops, please check out the MCDHH Calendar on our website for classes coming up later in the year.
