FUNERAL PROGRAM FORMAT

Although funeral programs are different in their own way, all of them share the same elements and factors. The listed formats below can help designers learn and discover more about funeral program designing.

1. The Name of the Deceased person

When designing a funeral program, the first thing to consider is the deceased person's name. Never put any other names in the space; make sure it's the name of the deceased person.

2. Other Essential Details

Apart from the deceased person's name, you should also consider other details such as the date of birth, date of death, location, date of the service, and title of the songs played or sung in the service.

3. The Name of Surviving Family Members

You should also include the names of his or her surviving family members to make the program more credible and reliable.

4. The Pallbearers

Although not necessary, including pallbearers in a funeral program isn't a bad idea. Adding such can complete the program.

5. The Officiant or the Person Delivering the Eulogy

Aside from the pallbearers, one important thing that you need to consider is the officiant or the person delivering the eulogy. They are as essential as the deceased's name and family members.
