To Encourage Critical Thinking

The content of newspapers is not only written to inform but to make the readers think about what they just read. This is why it is often considered that people who read newspapers are smarter or well-read. News articles especially political ones can encourage people to think a lot about serious subject matters.

What's in a Newspaper? Parts?

Headline and Byline

The headline is the newspaper's title and is there to catch the reader's attention, enticing them to read. On the other hand, the byline is quick information on who wrote the featured newspaper article.

Lead

The lead is an integral part of a newspaper's structure. It is a paragraph long and is made to make readers understand what exactly they are reading about.

Body

The body is the main section of the newspaper structure where the information and relevant details are shared. The amount of paragraphs it has depends on how much is known and approved by the publication.

Tail

The tail is the conclusion of the structure and summarizes what was written.
