National Family Day Definition and Meaning

National Family Day is an event that encourages families and family members to celebrate the present relationships and strengthen the bond that already exists through different family activities.

National Family Day aims to build relationships between couples, spouses, parents, children, and other members to emphasize the importance of love and support in nurturing positive relationships.

When Is National Family Day?

National Family Day is a celebration and international event in the United States when families are put in the spotlight, consisting of conventional and unconventional setups to celebrate aunts, uncles, grandparents, cousins, and even friends that a person considers family. National Family Day happens on varying dates each year, falling on the fourth Monday of September, landing on September 26, 2022, for this year's celebration.

National Family Day History

The origin and history of National Family Day originate back in 2001 by the National Center on Addiction and Substances, now known as the Partnership to End Addiction, as a movement to combat substance abuse among teenagers. The intention of setting up the holiday or event is to encourage families to share a meal, as research shows that kids or children who share meals with their families five or more times a week have lesser chances of resorting to the use of substances. Teenagers and younger people tend to open up and talk to their parents or guardians if they feel the support and love and a lesser chance to rebel, falling into unfavorable habits.

National Family Day Purpose, Importance

National Family Day is an international event that not many individuals are well aware of, but the event's purpose is pivotal for families, so it is advisable to take even a little time off to spend quality time with family members.

It Reminds People To Reconnect

In the age where electronic devices are one of the main modes of communication between persons, it's no wonder that people are more likely to communicate with each other using their mobile phones or computers. During National Family Day, there is a reminder that the key to having positive relationships is to have better communication in all aspects, especially in expressing negative and positive emotions. Celebrating the event allows family members to communicate their gratitude toward each other, especially those less likely to talk to each other.

Shows Appreciation to Friends

Families are not always related by blood, and sometimes there are instances when our friends feel like a sister or a brother to us through the bond they form over the years. National Family Day reminds people to show gratitude and be thankful for the people that helped us along the way, no matter what their blood relationship is to us. Express satisfaction and appreciation towards friends who put the effort to stay by your side through rough and happy moments during National Family Day.

It is Beneficial for the Health

The history of National Family Day points to the prevention of substance use and abuse by teenagers and young adults, which asks families to spend time together at least five times a week. The principal reason being family members can share their stories through a good meal or over a fun family activity without fearing judgment over a wrong decision or action. Good family relationships and tight bonds between members work marvels for physical and mental health, making a more comfortable, healthier, longer, and happier life.

What's In National Family Day?

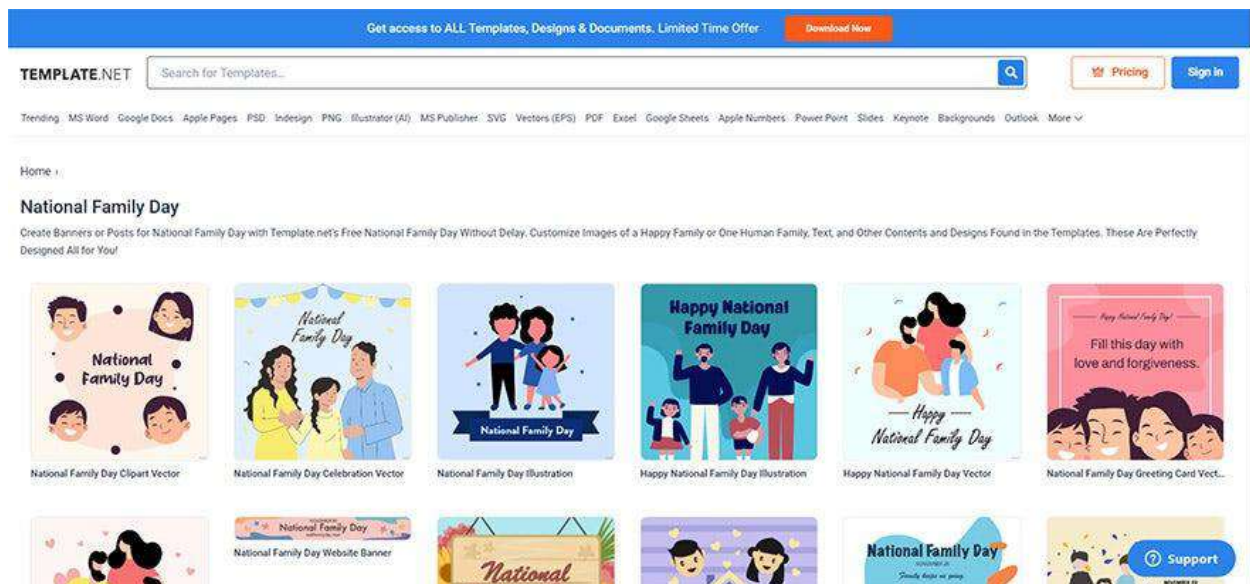

During National Family Day, families are highly encouraged to spend at least one meal together to build healthier human relationships to celebrate the event. There are also other activities that families can do instead of a meal, including doing some volunteer work for a church or adoption center, joining a parade or carnival during the following weekend, or going to a bowling alley or a fitness gym for healthy exercise. Whichever activity or exercise the family sees fit where they can enjoy, have funny moments, and act confidently and proudly around one another is already the care children want to have in the presence of their family.
