Help Identify Luggage

Airports are crowded with thousands of passengers on a daily basis regardless of the season. That said, it's expected that countless pieces of luggage will be pouring into the airports, especially into the baggage carousels. To help owners identify their luggage immediately on the carousels, they look at the luggage tags to ensure they're theirs. There's always the possibility that other passengers have the same brand and model of bags as them.

Proof of Ownership

For security purposes, airport staff might check if a passenger is the rightful owner of the luggage, and for that, they look at the luggage tag. Luggage tags are like seals or stamps that enable a passenger to provide proof that he or she is the owner of the luggage; it also helps him/her to truthfully deny claims that he/she is carrying stolen luggage. For these reasons, luggage tags are a must not just in airports but also ports, bus stations, and train stations.

Track Missing Luggage

Cases of missing luggage happen a lot in airports which is why luggage tags are necessary. Luggage tags help airport staff to track missing luggage and have them returned to the rightful owners as soon as possible. Though they provide tracking barcodes to every luggage, it's the luggage tag displaying the owner's name and contact details that confirms whether they found the right luggage.

Avoid Luggage Theft

Would-be thieves lurking in airports likely won't attempt to do some funny business to your luggage if it has a unique luggage tag. If it so happens they steal luggage, they won't be able to provide anything to prove that it's their name printed on the tag, and so the luggage will be taken by the airport staff and returned to the right owner. Attaching tags to your luggage is a simple and inexpensive strategy to avoid theft.

Luggage Accessory

Luggage tags are primarily for security purposes and prevent luggage loss, but they also make great accessories for your travel bags and suitcases. There are many types of luggage tags with unique designs catered to an individual's personality. Luggage tags add aesthetic value to your luggage and contribute to a traveler's goal of traveling with style.

What's in a Luggage Tag? Parts?

Name of the Owner

The name of the owner is the most important part of a luggage tag. It's the main component of the luggage tag as it indicates who the suitcase or bag belongs to. The owner's name should be complete with his/her first name and last name for full assurance, and it should be written in a simple font style with a large font size so it's easy to read.

Residential Address of the Owner

The residential address of the owner is also very important and must be written next to the owner's name. It indicates where the luggage should be returned in case it was lost and found. The address must be complete with the lot number, building name, street name, town, city, and zip code to avoid the luggage being delivered to the wrong location.

Contact Details

The contact details must include the luggage owner's email address and phone number. It's essential to include the contact details in the luggage tag so it's easier to reach out to the owner who lost his/her luggage. The contact details are typically written right next to or below the owner's residential address.

Design and Decorations

The colors, clipart, background, and other visuals in the luggage tag are its design and decorations. Though they're not really necessary, they make luggage tags double as accessories. In other words, they make luggage tags fashionable, not just for function.
