National Mentoring Day Definition & Meaning

National Mentoring Day is a special day to celebrate mentors in diverse fields and industries and recognize the incredible contributions of mentoring associations and organizations as they hold coaching sessions, business leadership programs, and professional development workshops for employers, individuals, and students.

National Mentoring Day is the perfect time for individuals, students, and groups to find mentors or attend mentoring programs to help them bring out their strengths and develop critical skills that they can apply to their respective careers.

When is National Mentoring Day?

National Mentoring Day is celebrated on the 27th of October every year. The tradition of celebrating this special event began when an award-winning business mentor Chelsey Baker established the project and founded this national day.

National Mentoring Day History

National Mentoring Day started from the different concepts of mentoring, including the character of Mentor in the Ancient Greek “Odyssey,” the common practice in guilds and trade apprenticeships in the Middle Ages, and the development of corporate executives through entrepreneur mentorship began in the 1970s. National Mentoring Month began in 2002, and, Chelsey Baker invented National Mentoring Day in March 2014 to support mentors, mentees, and entrepreneurs. The first Annual Mentoring Day was launched in October 2015, being officially inaugurated as an official National Day in 2016.

National Mentoring Day Purpose, Importance

National Mentoring Day is a meaningful occasion to encourage entrepreneurs, professionals, and students to appreciate and recognize their mentors and help others to receive mentoring programs and coaching services, as well as provide mentors, influencers, and leaders to work together to create synergy.

Increase Awareness of Mentoring

National Mentoring Day is the right time to spread awareness of the significance of mentoring. Help groups and associations create an event or a program to celebrate the advantages and results of mentoring and collaborate with a local school or community, along with other businesses, government agencies, and nonprofit organizations to organize some activities and workshops to teach the public about the fundamentals of mentoring. For example, host an event related to a mentoring and apprenticeship program at your workplace.

Recruit Individuals and Organizations for Mentoring

Dedicate some time to finding qualified individuals to become professional mentors and searching for organizations that are capable of holding mentoring events. If you have sufficient experience and professional skills that you can share, you can also apply and sign up to be a mentor. Try committing to a particular coaching and mentoring program at work or a local school in your area.

Acknowledge the Rewarding Contributions of Mentors

This international day is celebrated to fully acknowledge and honor the rewarding contributions and wonderful efforts of many mentors around the world. Say thanks to the mentor who made a huge difference in your life when you send them a creative and motivational greeting card, either in digital or hand-written format or via email. Tell your mentors how much they mean to your personal growth and professional skills development and write sincere messages on how much they are appreciated.

What's in a National Mentoring Day?

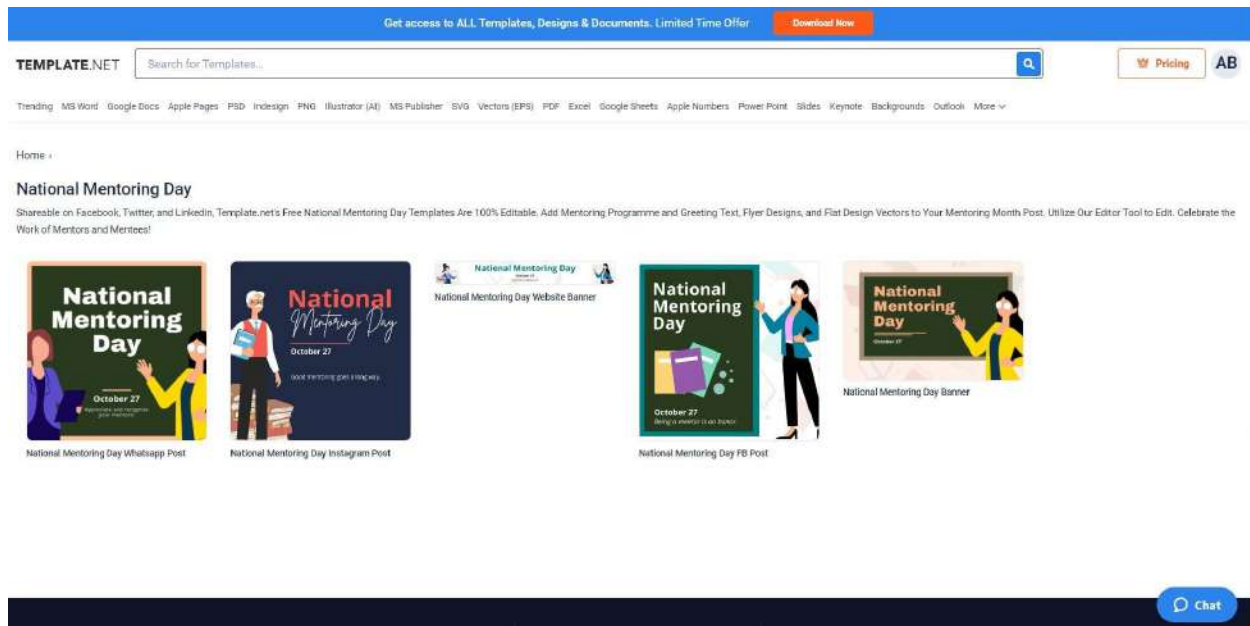

During National Mentoring Day, people in the United Kingdom and other countries design and send handmade or digital appreciation cards to their mentors. Some associations and organizations provide company training and learning resources during the mentoring relationship to employees and trainees such as instructional materials, training courses, videos, and other supplemental resources, while other people attend a mentoring virtual or physical conference. They also create networking events on this special day to build relationships between them and their prospective mentors, put their newly acquired skills into practice and elevate their confidence.
